Maritime Piracy

According to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea (UNCLOS) of 1982, piracy consists of any criminal act of violence, detention, or depredation committed for private ends by the crew or passengers of a private ship or aircraft that is directed on the high seas against another ship or aircraft, or against persons or property on board a ship or aircraft.

In recent years the increasing threat of maritime piracy has become a significant hazard to all who use the sea; the Horn of Africa region has become a particular problem area with a large number of attacks in recent years and there are increasing concerns about events in the Gulf of Guinea. As a result, countries are developing strategies to deal with this threat, including deployments of warships, and coalition operations to protect shipping such as the Royal Navy contribution to the Combined Maritime Forces.
